Cheryl Wilfong : Lost, but Found before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Lost, but Found:

to absorb these musings. I am already thinking of cutting short my responsibilities tomorrow to allow more time to read. This was an excellent, inspiring book. I particularly enjoyed the blog excerpts, and hope to sign up for that as well. My favorite essay was "What is Family, Anyway?" and "Louisa Von Trapp". And I thought it was interesting that immediately following "Family" was the essay "Oedipal Complex". I remember those days from both sides of the complex, and got more than one chuckle out of that one. Thank you, Ms. Wilfong, for sharing. This is a book I will keep in my bookshelf, to re-read when I need reminding that life can be simple.

A collection of memoir, travel, gardening, and Dharma essays.
