Hepworth is an experienced professional who knows the ins and outs of digital recording using a PC or Mac DAW as well as Cubase. He lays it all out by step clearly and succinctly, from studio set-up and installation to plug-in automation and CD quality audio exporting. Cubase is probably the most powerful music production software available for professionals or amateurs (I prefer it to Pro Tools) but its one zillion features and 800 page manuals are a minefield to the beginner. This book walks you through it safely and gets you producing your own music with MIDI instruments, virtual instruments, and vocal and instrumental tracks without frustration. Plus he is funny and likes music! I wish I had it 5 years ago. Steinberg should buy it for every customer. Go for it.PS Hepworth also has some fine videos online at macProvideo,8 of 8 people found the following review helpful. No video content!By Ryan HartThe book is well written, and very helpful so far. However, it should be noted that the video content advertised on both the book cover and the description is not included. I even contacted the publisher who informed me that no video content was made for the book. A shame, as it would have been very helpful. But the book is very good even without it. Just be warned. 5 of 5 people found the following review helpful. If you're a Cubase noob, this will definitely help you along the path to enlightenment. By Paul Anderson While I am not new to recording and production techniques in general, I am just getting started with Cubase. Following this book is definitely helping a lot. I go back and forth between working on my own learning projects and figuring things out on my own and then getting back to whatever point in the book I've left off at. The combination of the two is really getting me there. The book is well-written and often funny. It's from the point of view of a very experienced professional Cubase user who has the mindset of a patient and thorough teacher and I really appreciate that he took the time to write it. Thanks, Matthew!
