My daughter-in-law and son loved the pictures and ideas they found in it. Only problem-the book is too heavy to review comfortably, unless you place on a table or stand.

All rights reserved.strong west wind was blowing and whitecapped waves slammed the shores as I traversed the lake looking for the home I was to photograph. Deer were everywhere. The tall cottonwood trees were in full fall color and layers of dark clouds covered the tops of the local mountains. After an hour of dirt roads I saw a very small sign at the foot of a bootjack fence. I assumed I was at the right place. Fortunately the gate was open and I entered a complex that I hoped would be as spectacular as it had been described. The golden grass and huge trees seemed to welcome me as I made my way along a dirt road. In time several buildings came into view. First a rustic garage, then a few smaller cabins and then a main house. The golden grass and huge trees seemed to welcome me as I made my way along a dirt road.
